Out of these developments, basketball evolved into the game that we know today. This evolution can be attributed to the committees and governing bodies of basketball.

The Birth of NBA

The history of basketball will never be complete without mentioning the introduction and development of the National Basketball Association or NBA. It was basically formed in 1946. In the early days of the NBA, though there have been lots of great players, it doesn't enjoy the sophistication and popularity that it has today.

This changed in the late 50s and early 60s when Bill Russell entered the league. With Russell and the Boston Celtics, NBA received a new shine in the limelight as the team collected 8 successive championships. And in the 70s the Larry Bird-Magic Johnson matchup gave NBA a new height. Their team's battle for an NBA reign fueled many peoples interest towards the game.

However, the fame and glory that NBA has today is much attributed to Michael Jordan in the 1980s up to the 1990s.

Basketball, Refined

Throughout the years, basketball has been polished; the rules were changed that only 5 players per team are now playing on the court. The peach baskets were also replaced by iron rims with nylon nets beneath. The point system was also refined. The soccer ball was replaced with an official basketball. Long range shooting or the three-point shot were also included in the game. This was not included in NBA games until 1979 and in NCAA until 1980. The American Basketball Association or ABA league was the first one to use this kind of shot.
